Bus Tour of Englewood's Historic Places

By Paul Skizinski

More than two years ago, a message came to our society email asking if we were interested in working on sponsoring a bus tour of Englewood, featuring places of historic interest. I received that message from Kevin Snow, owner of Treasure Box Tours, the tour company that offered to facilitate the tour. I picked up the ball and ran with it, selecting the points of interest to be visited, establishing the itinerary, and contacting the owners and/or managers of each proposed destination.

The plans were made, and we were ready to go in November of 2020, but COVID-19 changed our whole world, and the tour was canceled. As we got through the worst of the pandemic and back to some semblance of normalcy, our tour was re-scheduled for November 13th of this year. Kevin signed up some of the regulars who have been on his earlier tours, and we added some of our local people, totaling 22 participants, including Kevin, the bus driver and myself.

Highlights of the tour included inside visits to Community Bank of Englewood (sometimes called the Flying Saucer Bank), Mayflower Church, the oldest existing church in Englewood, and the Thomas Skerritt house, the first home built in what is now Englewood.

CJ Cullinan, resident of Arapahoe Acres and EHPS member, boarded the bus and made a guest appearance as she directed the tour through the historic neighborhood and regaled us with stories about the building of the mid-century modern homes and their residents.

We enjoyed a lunch break at Colore Italian Restaurant, and were offered an excellent selection of foods, perfectly prepared and presented.

Doug Cohn, society historian and board member, a paid participant, was an invaluable aide as he provided colorful details about the places we visited and the amazing things that have happened in our small but historically significant city.

Road work re-routed our bus, and a couple of closures kept us out of destinations on our itinerary, but all together it was a success and was enjoyed by all. Many of our participants want to return to Englewood another time and see more points of interest, and we garnered some new members.

Thanks to everyone who helped make the tour happen. It was truly a team effort.
